Getty Marrow Collections and Exhibitions Intern

Description

Getty Marrow Collections and Exhibitions Intern

In partnership with the Getty Marrow Undergraduate Internship Program

The Social and Public Art Resource Center (SPARC) is accepting applications for a Collections and Exhibitions Intern. This position is a 10-week paid internship for undergraduate students from June to August 2024. SPARC creates public artworks and programs that empower communities and advance movements for justice and equity. This position offers valuable insight on how a community-based arts organization works to produce, preserve, and promote socially engaged artworks and programs.

About SPARC

The Social and Public Art Resource Center (SPARC) was founded in 1976 on the premise that art is a site for social justice. Our mission is to produce, preserve, and promote activist and socially relevant artwork; and ultimately, to foster artistic collaborations that empower communities who face marginalization. SPARC curates gallery exhibitions and programs that promote civic dialogue, in addition to creating and preserving murals that examine the most critical social and political issues of our time.

Responsibilities

About the Internship

The Getty Marrow Collections and Exhibitions Intern at The Dúron Gallery at SPARC in Venice provides an undergraduate student with a comprehensive overview of the non-profit community arts organization. Collaborating closely with the Archivist and Curator, the intern gains professional experience and insight into exhibition development within the organization. Working full-time (40 hours/week) for ten weeks between June 3rd – Aug. 9th 2024, the intern supports the Archive and Dúron Gallery departments. Their responsibilities include researching content, curating an online exhibition from the James Prigoff Collection, contributing to the development of upcoming exhibitions of John and Tara Tradell and the legacy of the American Indian Movement, and assisting in exhibition calendar and programming development for future exhibitions. The internship offers a stipend of $6,925 (approx. $17.30/hr) for the consecutive ten-week work period.
